

The State of Plastic Recycling

ANNUAL REPORT 2020 - KEY FINDINGS - MEXICO

Sustainability is one of the most pressing challenges we are facing as a global community – and it can only be solved by working together. This requires a clear understanding of consumer attitudes toward plastics recycling as well as the facts around them. In the first State of Plastic Recycling Annual Report, new findings are presented from a consumer survey conducted by YouGov, which Hi-Cone commissioned to better understand the opportunities and challenges in advancing the circular economy for the food and drinks packaging industry. The survey covered 5,509 adults across four markets – Mexico, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States, of which 1,002 were from Mexico. The survey found several striking results, such as:

- 1 Mexican adults were the least likely to report recycling all of their plastic waste.

Only 12% of Mexican adults reported recycling all of their plastic waste.

11% of Mexican adults reported they do not recycle any plastic waste.

- 2 Despite reporting recycling plastic the least, almost all Mexican adults (94%) believed that recycling plastics is beneficial to the environment.

82% of Mexican adults, who do not currently recycle all of their plastic waste, think they are not recycling as much plastic as they should, compared to 69% of adults across all territories.

Mexican adults were the most likely to report a need for more facilities and services that can be used to recycle waste items.

77% of Mexican adults report they need more recycling bins in public spaces (e.g. in shopping centers, on the high street etc.), compared to 62% of adults across all territories.

68% of Mexican adults report that they need more facilities for their homes (e.g. recycling collections, recycling bins etc.), compared to 46% of adults across all territories.

73% of Mexican adults report they need more recycling center facilities than are currently available, compared to 50% of adults across all territories.

92% of Mexican adults, who do not currently recycle all of their plastic waste, reported they would recycle plastic more frequently if they had more facilities and/or guidance, compared to 80% of adults across all territories.
